We are also planning to have some sports activities/tournament for members and their families during the course of the year.

An important aspect for all non-profit organizations is their work and interaction with local community groups. MEA 2005 Scholarship Award Update

For the year 2005, we received over 130 applications for our scholarship program from first year engineering students in Kerala. As in the previous years, the scholarship committee, after a rigorous process of evaluation short listed a select group of 11 deserving candidates. Individual contacts were established with the short-listed candidates via email, telephone, faculty at the colleges and several friends and family in Kerala who helped in verifying information on the applications including need for financial assistance. Now came the tough job of eliminating some more from well accomplished and almost equally deserving applicants; and the task was difficult, but the evaluation committee comprising of Vijay Kayath, George Mathew, Meera Nair, Ranjith Nair and Hariharan with able guidance from Sojan Antony, Sibi Kuruvilla were very focused and stuck to the task and completed the effort as scheduled by January 31st 2006.

The 2005 Scholarship committee have decided to award seven (7) scholarships this year to seven very deserving students. One of these Scholarships was sponsored by Malayalee Engineers' Association of North Texas, Dallas. The winners of 2005-2006 Scholarships are:

1. Ayyappadas, P. College of Engineering, Thiruvananthapuram. Mechanical Engineering.

2. Bibin A. Babu. College of Engineering, Thiruvananthapuram. Mechanical Engineering.

'Shyama, the Mystical Indian Woman'

By Sibi Kuruvilla

This year's fundraiser was an event that will linger in memory as one of the best shows that MEA has presented in the past few years. The dance show by Shobana and troupe, 'Shyama, the Mystical Indian Woman', was at the Stafford Civic Center on Gandhi-Jayanthi day and drew a huge capacity-crowd, in true testament to Shobana's star-power and MEA's organizing prowess. All the MEA committee members and volunteers who helped put together the event deserve kudos for their effort.

Dr.Rathnakumar of Anjali School of Dance was the MC for the program. The evening started off with a tribute to Mahatma Gandhi in a mutli-media presentation that spanned the life and mission of the great man, with a live rendering of 'Vaishnav Jan To Tene Kahiye', the hymn immortalized by Gandhiji. It was a preservation of timeless hope to remember this great man of peace and uncompromising integrity, in this era of rife and senseless violence around the world.

Shobana packaged a presentation especially for Houston, with Malayalam narrative and had a routine choreographed to A.R.Rahman's 'Vande Matharam'. The show was crafted in Shobana's master-strokes to entertain both the connoisseur and lay rasika, with some vibrant and graceful choreography that was innovative, while still retaining the classicism of Nrithya. The accompanying dancers were all longtime students of Shobana's at her dance-school, 'Kalarpana', in Madras.

The show started with classical Bharathanatyam pieces. The Anjali in Nattai ragam had the melody of vocal rendition and the rhythm of the bells on the dancers' feet that pierced the silence, creating a sense of unsullied purity. Rich orchestration and excellent dance sequences, sometimes performed alone, sometimes in a group, characterized the presentation. This was followed by a beautiful portrayal of Kaali, depicting the goddess' mysticism, her different forms ranging from the fierce to the benign, while detailing the abstractions of the Kali yantra, the Kundalini shakthi, and tantric worship including the partaking of the panchamakara. There was plenty of dramatic content in the gory mutilation of demons, in the drunken stupor of the goddess, and in the practice of sacrifice in worship. A solo dance depicting Nandanar by Bhavani, in an unhurried graceful flow, seemed to mark the transition from classical to 'freer' expression. The story of Shyama, a bride from rural India whose wedding is the context of the piece, was presented to the delight of the spectators, who responded heartily to the humor it contained. It followed Shyama from the proposal from a groom 'who has studied abroad', through the negotiations on her dowry which included a late demand for a 'two-wheeler', to domestic life after her wedding. This superb entertainer was followed by what amazingly seemed like a Thillana set to Bach. There was also a lively group piece set to a background of great percussion.

Shobana and her troupe of well-seasoned dancers left the spectators charmed in an enchanted experience of scintillating choreography and soulful music at the event.

Why Volunteer For MEA?

By Uday Salian

This seems to be a trivial question and most of the time the response would be not me let someone else do it. We could debate on this topic for years and not come to a good conclusion. Some may just equate it to a philosophical question. I would like to raise this question only to spike a general interest in the spirit of volunteerism and specifically with respect to Malayalee Engineers Association.

I don't know if there is a tangible advantage or benefit of being a volunteer. If it doesn't pay then why do it right? Wrong!! It may not pay in terms of green dollars but I believe there is a certain degree of reward that you could term it as a payment for your participation or sacrifice (may be a better term).

We all (at least I do) at some point in our life like to be part of something. We first think we are a part of our family, part of a country, part of a state (maybe Texas, or Kerala), part of our friend circle etc. It gives us a sense of security that we belong to something. This becomes more important when we start having kids (more so in a foreign land such as the U.S). We like to identify ourselves with something. When we become an MEA member we start a link between us and an association of like minded folks who share the same beliefs and culture.

By spending time to volunteer to an organization we open our minds to serving the community. Our kids will observe the parents and will try to imitate the role of a giver in her/his community as they grow. We want that to happen, don't we? We all want our kids to grow up to be a good citizen and one who would love to sacrifice their time for a good cause.

Folks, to make it short, I would encourage each and every one of our MEA members to try and spend some time to make MEA an intellectual family meeting place where we could have open discussion on important topics, have events that could bring us all together to share our thoughts and culture, help our kids to grow up in a positive environment. The end result will be a strong association of eager members ready to serve for the betterment of our community. That to me would be an ideal world. Let's see what we can give to MEA and not worry about what MEA gives us back in return. I assure you that with all the positive energy going in, there has to be positive energy coming out. Remember Entropy!! A very good example is our annual fund raising event which has been very successful last few years and I believe one of the reasons for its success has to be our tenured volunteers.

I happen to witness that during the planning and execution of the 2005 Shyama show. It was challenging but very rewarding experience for all the volunteers who spend so much time in it. At the end we came out with flying colors in all respects- punctuality, excellent coordination and finally able to generate good amount of money towards our scholarship fund. You can't beat that feeling.

Thank you from MEA Excom 2005

The 2005 MEA committee would like to thank each and every person who helped us through the year with our various activities. We have tried to put in our very best in carrying out the different responsibilities assigned to us. This was done keeping in mind our aim of carrying forward the goals of this organization and making it a shining example of cultural and social success. We have always tried to learn from all the valuable comments and suggestions that we have received after every event, and if not for the active involvement from all our members and friends, we would not have been able to go forward with our aim. We are also confident that the new committee will play an even better role in taking this organization forward, keeping in mind its vision and goals.

Thank You
